CURRENT COMMENT.

In last night's issue of the Plaindealer appears what the editor is pleased to call a reply to our comments of Saturday. The writer informs us that he was "quite overcome." We may assure him that that was the intention of the article. The Chronicle is not "laboring under the impression that the communication in the last issue of the Plaindealer was written by the editor himself." We are not wasting any time on guesses at the identity of anonymous writers nor firing good bird shot at epistolary fies. Enough for our purpose that the Plaindealer published the article and if the conventionalities of Strathcona journalism give immunity to editors who permit assaults on their contemporaries from the safe retreat of anonymity then we shall knock down a few parrots of the conventional fence and proceed across lots. After the editor has gone through another season of reduction like until the last few days perhaps he will exercise a little more care in regard to what ends and to what persons he gives the use of his columns. In newspaperdom as elsewhere a man is known by the company he keeps, and "evil communications corrupt good manners."

The editor says he "assumed" that the secretary of the Board of Trade had resigned when he used the word lately. One is curious to know whether or not the wish was father to the assumption, and we regret to say that in that as in another matter referred to we are "not open to conviction" of the truth of the statement. We prefer to believe that the editor knew very well that the secretary had not resigned, and used the word deliberately to injure.

The editor says he "was at the meeting of the board on Monday night and thought the matter would be brought up, but did not think it was his place to speak first." Why? If not his then whose? He was the only one we know of who had expressed any opinion on the subject. Besides the secretary of the board had asked him over the telephone if he had any criticism to make, to make it at the board meeting on Monday night and not descend to any underhand influence such as the one referred to. He did not say a word but chose rather to have the matter brought to a head in his paper by an anonymous letter. The editor denies writing the letter. The plaindealer is mistaken. We have placed the responsibility where, in our opinion it rightfully belongs and we did not indulge in personalities not justified by the attack. We merely made a few caps in order that whosoever they fitted might wear them.

It is not true that Mr. Weir took exception to The Chronicle being referred to as the Board of Trade organ, and last week we said so. The Plaindealer is not charged with small meanness and petty jealousy because the Chronicle has got ahead of it in starting a daily, but as the editor has decided to leave that point to the judgment of the public we are quite willing also to let it rest right there.

By some sort of reasoning, all his own the editor of the Plaindealer arrives at the conclusion that $75 paid to him is not a bonus while $1000 paid to the editor of the Chronicle. As he is, as a secretary an editor and a publisher in a class all by himself we will not undertake to dispel his illusion. The question resolves itself into this: "Is the Board of Trade being neglected? Is the secretary's connection with a daily journal not an advantage rather than a detriment? Does not every successful man and institution now-a-days make use of a daily paper for the furtherance of its interests?"

The matter is one that may be fairly left to the Board of Trade to decide, and moreover we may assure the editor that the secretary will be the first to know whether or not his Chronicle connection interferes with his secretaryship and as we cannot recall ever having received any money we had not earned we will conclude that it is too late in life to begin now and we will take what steps we think the case demands.

We asked the editor last week not to introduce the sort of journalism he seems since Saturday so much to dislike but he couldn't see it that way, apparently. On Friday evening there was a great amount of goodness in evidence around the office of the Plaindealer and one man closely associated with that paper was cackling like a barnyard pullet that had just laid its first egg, and talked glibly of how it would make the "old man" of the Chronicle sit up to answer that letter.

We learned on the old farm at home that it is the galloping jack that wins, that it is not safe to holler until you are out of the woods, that he who laughs last laughs best, and that you cannot always tell by the length of a rat's tail how fast he can run.

The Plaindealer biscuit factory instance is away beside the question. A biscuit factory is not nor can it by any means be made a medium of publicity. A daily paper can be, and the amount of advertising the city gets through it for nothing by reason of the daily news of the place, the exchange list and the distant subscriber if paid for at so much a line would run into a large sum of money. Besides the city gave the Board of Trade $1500. Out of that amount the secretary has so far received $166.66. Does the Plaindealer charge that that money has not been earned? What does the organ consider the exclusive time of the secretary? Does it propose his time shall be recorded at so many hours per day? Suppose there is a slack day or two in the Board's work, what would the Plaindealer suggest, the secretary should do? Anything, we suppose, except write copy for the Chronicle. The fact is that the Plaindealer's criticism has reference solely and is raised entirely on account of the rivalry of the Chronicle. The Board of Trade has never so far as we know delegated its prerogatives to the organ and its assuming the role of dictator is an unbecoming presumption. It says it is not used to such journalism as we practiced on Saturday. That is quite true. For years it has had its fling, and acted as the Warwick of local newspapers—a veritable King maker. Whom it chose to exalt was exalted and whom it chose to debase, was debased, but as we remarked some time ago "Times have changed since Hamah died."

The Plaindealer need not assume an air of injured innocence. No scavenger, literary or otherwise, was ever injured by being pelted with mud.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE PLAINDEALER

Dear erstwhile boss—
 I am so sorry you find the cordial and kindly feelings that used to exist between us disturbed and am much more sorry if more were possible that you of all men should see fit to disturb them. I admit being on the way of a laudable but precarious enterprise as stated in your paper on Friday, but so long as I was happy why did you worry so about it, or rather let your friend the citizen who was ashamed to put the name his father gave him to his letter in the dear old Plaindealer worry about it?

You are mistaken, dear boss, there was and there is no bitterness undrained of or otherwise on my part. We were only discussing precariousness, a subject your friend introduced.

It is quite true a letter in the Chronicle over the signature of one of the Chronicle Company did make mention of matters settled years and years ago, and were only recalled to memory by your friend's telling the how precarious was the future of my present undertaking. You know dear boss, that the only way we can judge of the future is by the past. It is quite true that one has ever had to resort to the courts to get his pay from the Plaindealer, but even the courts' decision are precarious and we come back to where we started. You always granted us a raise of wages when you thought we merited, but even those raises were somewhat precarious, too much so in fact to be heavily banked on as assets. The letter did not say, dear boss, that no over time was paid for the work in getting out the Christmas number. Hadn't you better read that unkindest cut of all' over just once more. The reference to no extras and no interest appears some twelve lines above the reference to Christmas 1905. It is quite true we had a Christmas meal at your home and we were received with marked kindness on that occasion and always by your excellent wife, a fact which no successful or unsuccessful on our business which you may allow in your paper will ever make me forget. I repeat, we had no desire to hurt your feelings with personalities, the letter was only discussing precariousness, and I may say for your information that you must have been looking through a very opaque cheese cloth, for I did not write the letter at all.

Sincerely yours,
 Andy.

WILL OPPOSE EARLY CLOSING

It seems that all the merchants in the city are not in favor of enforcing an early closing by-law. At the council meeting last night a request was made that the by-law should be suspended until those dissatisfied with it had time to present a petition to the council. As the by-law does not take effect until Saturday, May 25th, and will not really have any effect before Monday, it was decided to suspend it until the next meeting of the council on Tuesday next.

The law firm of Dawson & Hydenman wrote the council on behalf of certain merchants asking that the early closing by-law be suspended to admit the petitions being presented to the council objecting to the enforcement of the by-law. City solicitor Beek stated that the by-law could not be legally suspended. The city officials might be instructed not to enforce the by-law but they could not prevent people from laying claimants against anyone violating the by-law. Alderman Garispy was not in favor of suspending any by-laws, as he thought it was a bad policy. If the by-law were merely suspended for one week he did not object, however, as this really suspended the by-law for one day as the by-law did not come into force before May 25.

Alderman Daly strongly objected to the passing of an early closing by-law at all, as it curtailed the liberties of a number of taxpayers. He pointed out if the clerk wished to leave at six o'clock the storekeepers should employ others to take their places. He therefore advocated that the by-law should be suspended to admit of complaints against it being made. Ald. McCauley spoke along the same lines as Alderman Daly, while Alderman Picard objected to the by-law being set aside. Ald. Daly's plan of employing more clerks would, he pointed out, be impracticable in the case of large stores where they would really have to employ two sets of clerks. After considerable discussion it was decided to send the by-law until the next meeting of the council to allow of the objections being made. The Board of Trade, who recommended that the early closing by-law should be passed were to be made to it.—Journal.

AND WHEREAS it is desirable to issue the said debentures at one time and to provide the principal of the said loan payable by yearly sums during the period of twenty years, being the currency of the said debentures, and said sums being of such respective amounts that the aggregate amount payable in each year for principal and interest shall be as nearly as possible equal to the amount so payable in each of the other nineteen years.

AND WHEREAS (a) the amount of the debt intended to be created by this by-law is the said sum of $14,750.00.

AND WHEREAS (b) the period over which the loan is to be repaid is to be spread the said period of twenty years.

Mr. Clarke was selected as the most suitable applicant, but the Mayor said he was ineligible as he still held the position of Auditor to the city.

The solicitor said there was no legal bar to the appointment; it was a question of propriety. Mr. Clarke should not do the work of an auditor after being appointed as secretary.

The mayor said if he had to put in another man to complete the auditor's work there was a prospect of waiting another eighteen months for the audit.

Finally the meeting adjourned until Thursday evening without making any appointment.
